WWWG UPDATE:

Regardless of the urban myth(s) that the Starving Artist formerly known as Emil has carelessly spread throughout the width of the known Multiverse that WWWG is a heartless, evil corporate slave master who has kept this Starving Artist in Economic Chains; we have been so generous with his advance and expenses advanced that it will be somewhere north of 2134 AD (according to our primo Accounting Department lead by Mister Charles and his crack team of accountants) before WWWG

In this latest conflict with Emil, we made a publishing decision to break up his Russian Author style manifest into several easier to read additions that might offer us a greater return that his original, massive manuscript could do.
Again, given Emil's lack of any ability to grasp that the core mantra of Capitalism is that you must make a profit or go broke.
In his misguided belief that everything should be free and that people will gladly donate to his banned "GoToFundeeHim"

Luckily, cooler heads prevailed and with Emil still under house arrest (long story) there on the Island of Penang; we have turned this over to our crack, young (hip) marketing team to divide up.
The first edition has already been released and focused on the "Interview."

WARNING!

DO NOT ATTEMPT THIS ADVENTURE ON YOUR OWN…

As a responsible publishing house, we, at WWWG Productions, are duty bound not to recommend nor encourage Emil's extreme example of travel locations without advising you to first seek out the council and advice of your nearest religious representative before booking this tour…

Again, as a responsible publisher, we cannot swear that Emil is in Hell (although, there was much hope expressed in favor of this) and is not sitting out by the pool at some Hilton chuckling about pulling a fast one on us. We produced this with disclaimers to take it up with Emil…

GREETING CAMPERS FROM HELL!

Sitting here, out by the very inviting pool that overlooks the extremely scenic and world-famous pits of hell that you have always read so much about and I am here to say that what you read does not do justice to the realities of being here…although the poolside service here takes away from the view and most certainly it leaves something to be desired…

Needless to say, there was a lot I didn't know about this destination and I even didn't know how or what to pack. Convention wisdom that I learned as a kid in Sunday school suggested that it would be hot and the humidity would be as bad.

Would there be air conditioning? Do I get frequent flyer miles on this flight or could I use them to upgrade myself from my economy seat?

Would there be and what kind of Further to that point, do they offer free WIFI or are they on a cable system or worse yet (yes this was hell), could they still use dial up?

These and a million other questions came to mind as their travel brochures (those that they sent me with my tour package) were long on reasons to go but, lacked the detail needed to properly pack.

(Again, for legal reasons…I have been asked not to include any details about the actual flight and especially, to name the airline traveled as who would want to be known as the official airlines of hell?)

I can say that the flight was rather interesting, no frills…bring your own food…they came around offering those little packs of peanuts and asked me if I wanted one. I did until they said "That will be $4!"

To be truthful, this is just sour grapes on my part as I'm just jealous as they came prepared and I was stuck with a $4 bag of peanuts…and it wasn't a big bag at that and after eating every last one of them…I truly needed that $10 soda to wash them down with…they seemed rather dried out and stale…which gave me the idea to look closer (after eating them) at the package and much to my surprise it said "Greetings from the 1939 World Fair…"

processing center is truly staggering and that they do this volume or more on a daily basis is incredible.

In that they can maintain this neck breaking pace without any downtime was astonishing and a business model of unparalleled anywhere in the world today.

The speed and efficiency by which we breezed through a rather complicated immigration process and long lines was a nice touch.

The first impressions were solid and even the people seemed nice.

Arriving at our hotel with its epic vestige overlooking all of the massive transit camp and even some of the surrounding valley of hell…it truly was breathtaking. This hotel would rate with to the best that Mr. Hilton ever built but had a rather nice updated 1930's art deco design and definitely it had an old-world flavor to it. When I mentioned this to one our nice tour guides, they took us on a short tour of the hotel so that they could show us some of the more beautiful features created by who (that said) were some of the greatest designers and artists but, when pressed for specific names they became distant and you could see that they were starting to feel uncomfortable with this line of questioning…

So, I quickly took charge for the group and changed the conversation back to the astounding views from the patio.
Now having more time to ponder and think about it, I am starting to realize that somehow, we had touched on a sensitive nerve when we started asking in too much detail.
This seemed so out of character with our tour guides general willingness and their sense of true pride as they bragged about the true scope of their operations and the massive logistics.

I told myself.
It stands to reason that they would but, I had never stopped to think about it before.
At the time and that moment, I was merely willing to write the whole experience off as a valuable lesson learned on the politically correct two step here in hell.
Later, after having a longer opportunity to let this all sink in and it was then, that I began to realize what a gigantic bummer I had hoped to be doing with the several hours per day of downtime between our scheduled events that they gave us for inner thought and meditation.

"You know it sucked the big one, Bubba!" I had plans…yes, I did…thank you very kindly and because of some petty little bureaucratic rule it was (pardon the pun) "going to hell without a handbasket!"
I had very high hopes of being able to catch up with all those people who said they would be waiting for me, here in hell.
I thought it would be kind of a courtesy call on those kind folks and catch up with them.

see…as I assumed that a large part of my family tree would be here and they still owe me money. In retrospect, I quickly narrowed them off my working list of names as (for the most part) I didn't care much for them when they were alive so, why waste what little time I had here sitting around and listening to them bitch and complain…especially, when I could be introduced to some of history's best and worse…

At least that was the plan and now thanks to some two-bit, lousy privacy policy, it was going to ruin my agenda for what could have been the best vacation I ever had but, their stupid rule(s) might very well prevent me from all this…

WELCOME TO HELL...

5 TRILLION CUSTOMERS SERVED!

As I was on a package tour and not immigrating or relocating, the whole hell experience for my tour group was vastly different that if you came on your own. There was no endless waiting in lines to get into the processing center and into the huge as hell transit camp that lied on the other side of the processing station.

On one hand, it was a shame as we would never be exposed to the true "I'm in hell!" experience but, then on the other hand, those lines were a mile long and didn't seem to be moving at all.

I will note that they (at the processing center) were rather successful in their use of the Disney method of crowd control by snaking the lines left and right and giving the appearance that the lines were much shorter than they really were. In fact, I don't remember anyone upset about the wait to get in.

We breezed through the lines and went directly through the V.I.P. Gates. No fuss or wait time…our first impression was that this is a well-run organization…and I even bet the trains run on time!

Now think about it; for a man who is a couple billion years old, he looked rather good…maybe it was an earlier picture or photoshopped as one of the ruder members of our tour group offered up.
They had thought of everything and had a cool drink and those little wet towels waiting for us on the shuttle bus…and we headed down the long rows of barracks in passing transit camp and up to the nearby bluff, where our spacious hotel awaited.
As we made the long transit to our hotel (I must admit that I only half heard the tour guides as it had been a long flight and those
